Hongkons, June 10th, 1876.

THE N. C. Daily News has been reviving -much agitated question - namely, the exces-Bive rate charged for Life Insurance to residents in China. It enters elaborately into figures by which it undertakes to prove that Shanghai, instead of being the unhealthy place it is assumed to be by the Home Insurance offices, has a lower rate of mortality, than any of the large towns of England, and will compare very well with districts famous for their salubrity. Much time aweeping the doorway. the same may be said of Hongkorg. The latest returns show a very low death rate even for a licalthy climate, and for some time it has been 23 in the thousand, This is little, if any, higher than the rate for London or Bristel, the two healthiest and ordered pay 50 cents for damage to the of the large towns of England, and a good deal under that of Birmingham, which of thate years has averaged from 26 to 28 in the thousand. It may certainly be pleaded that the lives here are picked ones, and that many eauses fatal to life do not exist here among the European community. But that does not affect the broad fact that the death-rate is low, and is likely to go on decreasing. The health of the Colony has improved in a remarkat le degree. It is due partly, no doubt, to the greater temperance and sobriefy shown at the table by the residents, partly to their more extended acquaintance with the climate, and the proper means of preserving boulth, and partly perhaps, to t'o observance of greater precaution in not venturing too much in the sun. In former times the disturbance of the soil was apt to cause an outbreek of lever, most disastrous and fatal in its effect. The sanitary conditions are much improved, and there is every hope that are, to all appearance, effected in vain as far as the Insurance Companies are concerned. They have written down Hongkong and certain of the Treaty Ports unhealthy, and they will not admit that they can be otherwise. Facts seem lost upon them; figures prove nothing to them. Very fair ground can be made out for claiming to be treated differently, if the Insurance Companies will but listen to reason. The difficulty is to get them to institute inquiries and consider the question. THE visit of the Corean Ambassadors to Japan at the present time is a noteworthy event. For the first time a number of those highly conservative people are being brought face to face with the civilisation they have so strongly dreaded, and will be able to mark the advance made by the Japanese people during the last ten years. They have seen for the first time and travelled on the iron road, and they have witnessed the various improvements and inventions adopted from Western nations by the Government of Japan. Much that they have encountered has been entirely novel not they have been a guarable impressed t

LAW IN CHINA. It is not our intention to attempt any analysi the penderous statute law, or of the voluminous but arbitrary and unsettled mass of common law. So far as is at present possible, this | object has been sought by persons specially skilled in legal matters, but the result bas not been very rich or very valuable. We should have no hope of throwing additional light on the topic, and we shall therefore confine ourselves to a consideration of the place assumed by law in the fabric of Chiness society, and o the manner in which probably the first legislators were led to their ensotments.

One of the earliest European writers on the philosophy of law asserted positively tost the monarchical form of government was from the very first the most widely distributed. reason given for this assumption was that monarchy is shadowed forth in the paternal relation, and that, starting from the inberent order of the family, the subordination of tribes and the of races under the patriarchal system was so natural as to be inevitable and even espential. Luter investigations have proved however that in the dawn of civilisation, or more correctly speaking before civilisation had dawned, the family organisation is far from perfect; There is in fact no family. > DEATH OF MR. HOME, THE SPIRITUALIST.

The death is announced of Mr. Home, the well-known American spiritualist, who died on which in their usual practical manner, they Saturday evening in a railway carriage, whilst on a journey from St. Petersburg to Borlin. Mr. Home was of Scottish parentage, and was born in 1833, near Edinburgh. He has visited paper, creates a sensation in Persian family nearly every country in Europe, and is understood to have been extensively consulted by crowned heads. In 1864, he was ordered to quit Rome, the authorities being naturally unwilling to allow such a person to remain in the Pope's dominions. In an antobiographical sketch... "Incidents in my Life," published in 1863, in which he enters into the rationale of spiritualism, he says, "The only good I have ever derived from 'the gift' is the knowledge that many who had never believed in a future existence are now knopy, through me, in the certifude of the life to come." A second series of "Incidents in my Life" was published in 1872. In 1858 he married the daughter of a Russian nobleman, god-taughter of the Emson. In 1871, Mr. Home married again a Russian lady of noble birth.

THE MAGNA CHARTA ASSOCIATION Not only in the fashionable thoroughfares of London was there a great Magna Charta Demonstration on Easter Monday. There was an equally enthusiastic tea-party in the afternoon at Doughty Hall "The gallery was filled with ladies and gentlemen. At five o'clock the first service of ten appeared : oake, marmalade, ac., &c., was served concrously; everyone was satisfied." With magnanimous self-sacrifice it had been decided that "no profit should accrue to the Magna Charta from the Tea," and the result was general satisfaction with the viands." "The second relay of tea took place a little before six o'clock." Hymns were sung with fervour about Tichborne, Magna Charta, Truth, Right, and Dr. Kenealy. -

A GUOD OPENING.

There appears to be a fine opening for terrier oge and active cuts in British Burmah, which, according to the annual report of the chief commissioner on the administration of that country for 1874-75, lately issued, is in some parte overrun by rate. These animals make periodical visitations to certain districts, where they are not only a serious nuisance but, owing to their voracity, reduce the inhabitants to a state bordering on starvation. The Karen district, east of the Sittang river, was, it is stated, " again ' afflicted with a visitation in the shape of a rat plague, which caused a larging ravages and euch a deficiency of the food supply that the unfortunate inhabitants were reduced to a precarious subsistence on green bamboo shoots and jungle roots. Their affection for their rat-infested homes was however, so great that they could hot be induced for some time to immigrate to the district of Toungoo, where ample provision had been made for their sustenance, and lived or rather died, on their bamboo-shoots and jungle roots; for, owing perhaps to the indiregible nature of this diet, the mortality among them is reported to have been excessive. It is satisfactory to learn that the rate have during the current season sought fresh pastures, and the Karen district is now free from these unwelcome visitors. Should they return, it might be advisable to try the effect of enting them; The Estisians during the elege acquired the habit of rat-eating, and rather liked it than not. If the rate once discover that their presence is esteemed a blessing rather than a curse, they will, there can be little doubt, soon make themrevenue is nearly Tie. 10,000 over that of the how the Foodbow Telegraph School is progress. from experience that it is the last to disappear appeared and made a speech, the most telling selves conspicuous by their absence. -Pall Mail

The eagle may be found, however, upon keeply, if the reason is that you do not feel more than one roval coat of arms. Boutell writes, "the eagle of four Emperors charged in relief upon the early shield in the north choir aisle of Westminister Abbey has a single head, and is not crowned." Edmond Plantagenet, K.G., Duke of York, A.D. 1402, who was burried at King's Langley, Herts, lisplays an imperial eagle upon his arms with two Leads, but not crowned. The Crown of England is always described as an imperial crown: "Imperial crowned-i.e., surmounted by the Crown of England." The royal arms display "a lion statant, guardant, or imperially crowned." Gwillim says that King George's achievement of arms was "charged with imperial crown of Charlemaign;" and at the coronation the King "is crowned with an imperial crown." The first who used such a crown was Henry III. Other authorities seem to say that an Empress need not be crowned, or through the ceremony of coronation apon obtaining that dignity there might be a titular Empress.
